THERE SALLE

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER. Under the Fashion head, a Paris writer

The variety of ball dresses for the approaching season of gaiety, is so great that it is difficult to select the few which I am to describe. The most expensive lace is employed, and diamonds, feathers, and artificial pretty toilette for the evening is composed of pink tarlaton with nine flounces edged with a very parrow black velvet and goipure lace. The low body is pointed before and behind, and trimmed round the top and points with narrow plack velvet. Over this is worn an Antoinctee cape of black guipure, with a deep frill, covering the body to the waist, the ends tied behind and hanging. The eleeveare formed of two puffs, tied with black velvets with long ends. Another is of white talle, with four flounces cut in large scallops, and trimmed with three rows of bouillennes. Very narrow coral-colored velvets are looped together across each scallop, and fastened by hows. The body is low, with very short sleeves covered by fails reaching the top flounces, and edged with blonde. The berth is formed of beuillonnes, trimmed like the flounces with velvet, and ornamented in fromt by a bouquet of daisies, mixed with branbouquet forms the head-iress.

The evening bead-dresses are usually made either in the form of a cache paigne or a diadem. A pretty one in the former style is composed of a wreath of pink acacia and rose leaves across the front, fastening two turts of tuile placed very backward. Behind should be rose-leaves with long sprays of acacia, and two long and white barbes of tulle simply hemmed. One much admired consists of two plaits of blue velvets, one across the front, the other more backward .-These were both spotted, with silver stars, and attached by a silver cord with two tassels, one hanging lower than the other. Our for the firm. BENJ, HYDE BENTON, fashionable d mes trim bonnets, mantles, caps and dresses, with this new lace and silks.

At the present moment, the dresses that are more frequently seen, in addition to the woolfn testures are of black silk. These roles ques almost universally; the old-fashion buckle is restored to lavor. Baudio, Rue, de la Paix, displays among other novel and magnificent ornaments, beautiful jeweled buckles.

DWELLING HOUSE, with Kitchen adjoining:

to 0. They are very large and wide, some are of plain, or richly wrought gold, others are studded with precious stones. Silver git, po ished silver, and steel are also employed in the materials used for buckles. All are light and graceful in form and design, and bear little resemblance to the clumsy ornaments with which our grandparents decorated the waist, the knees and the shoes.

A PARISIAN PANIC.

Vague prophecies of evils repeated by the higher clergy, have inspired a singular degree of terror among the multitode in Paris. The destruction of the city is expected. The Buston Post save:

"Already have the populace of the streets got hold of the fearful prognostication, and each one gives his own version of the manner in which this destruction is to be accomplish ed-the most favorite method of arrangement being the filling of the catacombs, which run beneath the whole of the city, with gun-powder, which work, say the gossips, has been going on for some time -ever since the catacombs have been closed; and, on the slightest symptoms of a general raising, the train-which can be fired from the Emperor's study, either at the Tuilcries or St. Cloud-will be set light to, and in less than one minute the whole of Paris will be blown into the air, or rather sink into the ghastly receptacles which run beneath! The idea is a perfect specimen of the ingenuity with which the common people of Paris can turn and invent the bints and fancies of their own."

United States, says a Paris letter in the Philadelphia Gazette, who was sharing the spicedid hospitalities of Compeigne, appeared one evening at a ball in a dress precisely identical with that worn by her imperial majesty in persoi! Great was the astonishment and dismay of the court ladies, for it is known that the Empress Eugenie, in-ists upon the strictest secreey being observed as to what is destined to adorn her imperial limbs. Evidently, Lowever, the secret had been here this time, betrayed, and the audicious "citizeness" vied in fashion and novelty with and good naturedly asked, "which dress was to be considered the original," the American lady was able to reply that that was her "second" appearance in that character!
